

It's hard to think of something to add to the already overwhelming evidence about the danger of nuclear energy, but I wanted to add my voice to the list of people who don't believe the risk is worth it. As someone who lives just a few miles away from SONGS, I've come to ignore the ever-present danger that exists there, but that doesn't change the facts, which are, it only takes one incident, compounded by uncontrollable factors, to create a catastrophe, and rendering many miles of California coastline uninhabitable for decades! Not to mention the waste, leaks, incidental human errors and lapses, and other on-going problems that receive little or no attention, by either the media or plant management. The risk is simply too great!
